Every Dime. Online. In Real Time.

ANNUAL REPORT 2024

A MESSAGE FROM OUR NEW CEO JOHN HART

My name is John Hart. I'm a longtime friend and supporter of Open the Books.

As you know, we recently lost our CEO Adam Andrzejewski who unexpectedly passed away in August.

Adam's enthusiasm was contagious. His passion for transparency and putting every dime online, in real time, made Open the Books a tremendous success.

Adam was a great leader and a great friend. He loved his family, his community and his country. He believed every dollar saved in Washington was a dream realized somewhere in America.

I met Adam when I was working for the late U.S. Senator Dr. Tom Coburn. We had worked with a Senator named Barack Obama on a landmark transparency bill called the Federal Funding Accountability and Transparency Act of 2006. That bill put all federal spending online in a searchable database for the first time.

When Adam made Dr. Coburn the Honorary Chairman of Open the Books he said the Coburn-Obama bill made his work possible. But I can tell you Dr. Coburn believed that it was Adam, and his talented and dedicated team and board, that made our vision of citizen activism a reality.

I believe that vision is more vital today than ever. So I'm honored to succeed Adam Andrzejewski as the CEO of Open the Books.

I can promise you that we will honor Adam's legacy. We'll be revving up the transparency revolution.

You see, at Open the Books, we believe transparency is a first principle. It's a building block of representative government written into our Constitution that makes all our other freedoms possible. For most of history, and for much of the world today, transparency was and is a distant dream. At Open the Books we'll never take our freedoms for granted, and we'll never stop fighting for taxpayers.

Our mission and values don't change based on who wins. Our job isn't to cater to power but to speak truth to power. Tom Coburn spoke truth to power. Adam Andrzejewski spoke truth to power. I'll speak truth to power.

I say this with resolve but also humility. I don't believe there is such a thing as "my truth." Truth is something that exists apart from my perspective. I believe Americans are hungry for reality-based politics and they want institutions like ours to provide information they can trust. That's what we've done, and that's what we'll keep doing.

Now, I have a perspective. I believe Thomas Jefferson was on to something when he said: "The natural progress of things is for liberty to yield and government to gain ground."

I want to tilt the scales toward liberty by giving taxpayers the information they need to hold government accountable.

An important part of our work will be investing in technology and expanding our database of government spending, the largest database of its kind in history. We've called our quest to map all government spending The Spending Genome project. Now, we're going to call it Project Adam to honor Adam's legacy.

That project will be something we're always building, always creating, always expanding and always perfecting.

Individual data points in a database may not seem remarkable, but I can promise you that big data can create big change. Every piece of data Craig Mijares and his team painstakingly track down and enter is a brush stroke, a pixel, a point of light that creates a constellation -- a picture that tells us something important about the nature of government and our relationship to it.

This is important because we hear a lot these days about what government should do to constrain technology. But I want to flip that script. Instead of asking what government should do to constrain technology we should be asking what technology should do to constrain government. The answer to misinformation isn't more mandates, or censorship, but more information you can trust. Martin Luther King, Jr. put it well: "Darkness cannot drive out darkness; only light can do that."

Let me close by saying that even though I had a special relationship with Tom Coburn, I believe this legacy belongs to Barack Obama as much as it does Coburn, or to former President George W. Bush who signed the bill into law.

So whether you're a Republican or Democrat, conservative or progressive, you're invited to join the transparency revolution. We know transparency can transform the way we govern ourselves, and we're confident the fight against waste is the best and only path forward.

2024 MARKETING REPORT 12

OUR TEAM 14

LETTER FROM JOHN HART & CRAIG MIJARES

2024 proved to be a whirlwind of a year - from Adam Andrzejewski's passing to John's onboarding to the presidential election. Our team did not stop. We continued to stay ahead of the news cycle - speaking truth to power day in and day out. Not only did we surpass our $4 million stretch fundraising goal thanks to a challenge gift in Adam's honor, we raised $4.3 million+ which positions us for an eventful and impactful 2025.

During his first month in office (2025), President Trump issued historic Executive Orders that dealt what The Washington Post called a "death blow" to DEI and affirmative action. Trump's actions follow more than three years of relentless, rigorous and well-publicized oversight from Open the Books. While many organizations and individuals had been critiquing DEI during the Biden years, Open the Books distinguished itself with its rigor and depth of data analysis.

This is just one example of how our work at Open the Books produces results. Our reporting has reached tens of millions of Americans and continues to make Congressional impact - and we're only getting started.

As we look to the next 18 months, our organizational priorities are:

MAINTAINING OUR EDGE AS THE GO-TO ORGANIZATION FOR THE FACTS

We bring hard numbers to today's bite-sized, fast paced media landscape. As the influence of traditional, legacy media outlets wanes, Open the Books works tirelessly to amplify our data and investigations and reach diverse audiences.

Each year our goal is to incrementally increase our exposures and media coverage to reach millions of Americans directly.

CAPITALIZING ON ACTIVITY & ENTHUSIASM AROUND DOGE

We are conducting a total and comprehensive review of all 441 agencies in the Federal Register including a look at historical outlays and employee headcounts.

Open the Books is helping DOGE Caucus members, key committee members, and any interested member of Congress use our deep catalogue of research to develop concrete legislative proposals to downsize the administrative state and reorganize federal agencies.

BUILDING TRANSPARENCY 2.0 TOOLS

The secret behind technologies like AI and machine learning is big data, which requires an assembly line of data entry. We're already the leader in that work and must expand it in order to build next generation tools that can hold government accountable. We've been the architects of Transparency 1.0 and can lead the way to Transparency 2.0. Our data dragnet (also called the Spending Genome Project) has enabled us to do real-time oversight into public spending in Los Angeles during the fires and longer-term forensic audits into Qatar's influence in K-12 education.

ADAM ANDRZEJEWSKI'S REMARKABLE LEGACY

Adam was devoted to bringing transparency to government. He walked away from business 15 years ago with a singular idea: hold government accountable to the taxpayers it serves. He founded Open the Books to accomplish that task. He was a happy warrior. Under his leadership, Open the Books has become a highly respected well-known brand. His death is a loss not only to his family and his organization but the nation.

Adam's belief in the power of transparency to transform government and hold it accountable at every level is the driving force behind our work. His relentless pursuit of open records and forensic auditing has set new standards in the fight for government transparency.

Adam's dream was to spark a transparency revolution. The result of his leadership is a well-oiled machine that operates at enormous scale and efficiency, dedicated to posting 'every dime online,' in as close to real time as possible. The organization now generates tens of thousands of media mentions, and our work is cited in dozens of Congressional hearings, oversight letters, and bill introductions each year.

Guided by the dedicated team he built, Adam's vision will guide us forward and inform our work in the years to come. We are more dedicated than ever to helping taxpayers hold government officials to account for their spending in a way that honors both Adam and our honorary chairman, the late Senator Tom Coburn.

ADAM ANDRZEJEWSKI

1969 - 2024

Adam Norris Andrzejewski was born August 2, 1969 to John and Janet (Norris) Andrzejewski. He grew up in Herscher, Illinois, a small town full of good people and a place that formed in him a strong sense of community and civic pride. He studied business at Northern Illinois University and after graduating with a BA in Business Management and working briefly as a financial adviser, he became an entrepreneur, co-founding the community publishing firm HomePages® Directories which grew to become the largest publisher of small-town telephone directories in the United States. Seeking a larger impact, Adam successfully exited that business after nine years of rapid growth and began a second career in public service and public policy.

Starting with a gathering of concerned parents and taxpayers at a neighbor's kitchen in 2010, Adam began obtaining and publishing local school district expenditure records online. His call to "publish the public checkbook" and create better governmental accountability grew quickly from suburban school districts to community colleges, to what became Open the Books. With the mission "Every Dime, Online, in Real Time" Adam's nonprofit became the nation's largest government transparency portal, growing to include billions of searchable government payroll, pension, and line item expenditures from all units of local, state, and federal government. In the words of the Wall Street Journal, "Open the Books has fomented a revolution in fiscal transparency." His fact-based, nonpartisan work broke national news independently and consistently informed journalists across the political spectrum, from Fox News to the New York Times. Research published by Open the Books is repeatedly cited in Congressional oversight hearings and reflected in federal legislation. Adam's incredible work ethic, energy, and practical sense of optimism will be deeply missed by his colleagues, and by advocates for strong fiscal accountability in government everywhere.

Adam's proudest role was as husband and father. If you spoke with Adam on any topic for more than a minute or two, you were certain to hear a story about Kerry, the love of his life, or about his daughters Emma, Molly and Ellie, who filled Adam's days with joy, surprise, and constant wonder.

He was a man of quiet faith and trusted God deeply. As a dad, husband, entrepreneur, or public accountability advocate, Adam was first a good friend and a positive influence on everyone he came to know. Across a wide circle of people from all walks of life, Adam was loved for his enthusiasm, encouragement, optimism and decency. His sudden passing leaves us with an emptiness that we know will one day be filled with God's peace, and with his own spirit of can-do possibility and passion for life that are his legacy now.

August 2024 Obituary

2024 BY THE NUMBERS

REAL WORLD IMPACT

A sampling of our most impactful investigations of 2024, sparking national headlines and action from elected officials.

SCHOOLS FOR RADICALS - DEI AT THE PENTAGON'S K-12 SCHOOLS

We released multiple updates over two years and compiled them into an exhaustive oversight report released in July 2024. Along the way, we shared our findings with GOP Caucus Chair Elise Stefanik and House Armed Services Committee Members (HASC). With our second update, we briefed Stefanik's office and coordinated the rollout to include her comments, amplifying the interest and coverage in what might have otherwise been a niche topic.

The real-world impact of the public pressure resulted in Kelisa Wing being removed from her role as DoDEA's first DEI chief and the dismantling of the DEI office entirely.

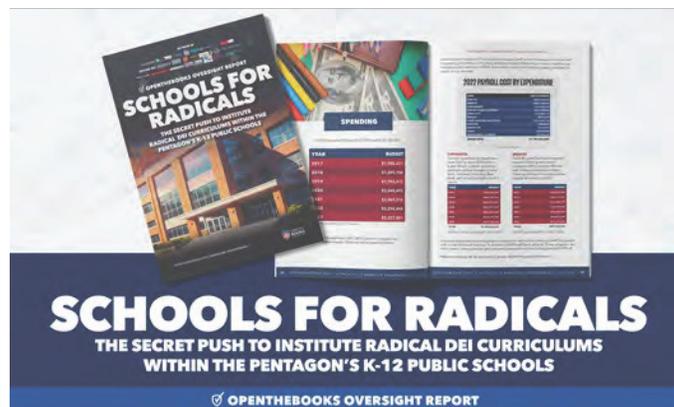

Our subsequent reporting found that while the office was technically closed, it was a lie by omission. The office was replaced with a 12-person DEI "Steering Committee," designed to inject its worldview across every aspect of DoDEA from curriculum, to classroom environment and pedagogy, to hiring practices.

CAPITOL HILL IMPACT

Multiple House Armed Services Committee hearings included our findings, and letters citing us were repeated: A September 2022 letter to Secretary of Defense Lloyd Austin asking for answers about the DEI Office and Chief Kelisa Wing; a follow-up from Reps. Stefanik, Banks et al. asking about the replacement DEI Steering Committee; and a July 2024 letter demanding answers on radical pedagogical materials and calling for removal of the DoDEA leadership team after chronic obfuscation. That same letter, which came on the heels of our official oversight report, "Schools for Radicals," called for the removal of DoDEA President Tom Brady and his leadership team.

Rep. Stefanik and Sen. Ernst sponsored the Servicemembers' Bill of Rights entitling military families to review the DoDEA curriculum materials. It was included in the 2024 NDAA. Rep. Banks has a wish list of amendments for the 2025 NDAA: Freeze DEI hires; abolish the Steering Committee; and create a school choice pilot program allowing military members to use local schools as do State Department officials.

DEI & TAXPAYER DOLLARS IN HIGHER EDUCATION

Amid the campus upheaval following the October 7 attacks in Israel, we began taking a look at how much Ivy League schools benefit from the taxpayer, preferential tax treatment on their endowments, and how they spend the money to inculcate far-left world views on campus and beyond via research projects. At Northwestern, we examined the deal they have with the Qataris for a satellite campus as well as more cash flowing in from the Qatar Foundation. We did similar investigations of DEI-related payrolls and spending at public universities, starting with UVA and the UNC system, following by nine more schools. The public schools' finances are chronicled in our report, "State of the State Schools: A Look At Public University Finances Reveals DEI, Foreign Influence & Radical Ideas Thrive Far Beyond The Ivy League."

Through unprecedented, real-time engagement with journalists on X, our findings made a broad impact during the various hearings on Capitol Hill. Our findings were tweeted by Sen. Ted Cruz, and journalists Mark Levin, Peter Schweizer, and Tammy Bruce. As various reporters had described different pieces of the puzzle and covered our investigation, we engaged in conversation throughout the hearings with Alana Goodman (Washington Free Beacon), Zach Kessel (National Review), Nellie Bowles (The Free Press), and subject matter experts like Adam Kissel (Heritage Foundation), Dr. Sara Hirschhorn, and Richard Goldberg (fmr. Sen. Kirk, Gov. Rauner).

Further coverage followed: The New York Post published a board editorial calling on the Ivies to lighten the load on the American taxpayer; Newsmax Magazine (750,000 distribution) cited Open the Books in a feature piece; The Hill published an op-ed by Merrill Matthews citing our work; and a documentary, Exclusion U, highlighted our findings.

At the state schools, our investigation of UVA's spending on DEI-related staff and projects led the school's public affairs department, headed by an alum of Gov. Terry McAuliffe, to launch an earned media effort to discredit and minimize the findings. Despite having proudly pledged to investigate roughly $950 million in DEI-related projects, programming and headcount, the school was now working to downplay it.

Gov. Glenn Youngkin later appointed multiple new members to the Board of Visitors – the group that effectively steers UVA policy.

At the University of North Carolina, our investigation of DEI-related spending and headcount was one of the final pieces of reportage prior to a vote to redirect DEI monies at Chapel Hill to campus safety. Later, in May 2024, the Board of Governors for the whole UNC system voted to change UNC's DEI policy, essentially returning the school to political neutrality, moving away from viewpoint discrimination in hiring, and ensuring adherence to nondiscrimination laws.

In a press release, UNC said, “The university, through its administrative programs and mandates, cannot prescribe a narrow ideology, a single conception of progress and justice in society. The proposed policy requires that university administrators refrain from taking political or social positions and adhere to laws on nondiscrimination and institutional neutrality.”

The National Association of Scholars published a piece on our findings by Dr. Ian Oxnevad (UC Riverside), “The Looming Irrelevance of Middle East Study Centers,” including our finding that the Department of Education had spent more than $22 million to fund such university centers.

“Alarming, but not surprisingly, Open the Books found that each university that received grant funding touted anti-Israel professors in their grant applications,” Oxnevad wrote. He made the case that such centers should – and likely would – go out of vogue given geopolitical changes including the Abraham Accords. “While Open the Books rightly raises concern about the lack of federal oversight into who receives Middle East Studies funding and why, the changes on the ground in the Middle East itself threaten to render most of the field obsolete.”

CAPITOL HILL IMPACT

Open the Books findings played a prominent role in October 7-related hearings: Rep. Burgess Owens displayed a huge check on the dais showing the funding Qatar provided to Northwestern University; Rep. Kevin Kiley gave a floor speech citing us; and Sen. J.D. Vance introduced a bill to increase the 1.4-percent tax on excessive endowments to 35-percent, effectively ending the special treatment these schools receive.

COVID - DR. FAUCI'S FINANCES & NIH ROYALTY COMPLEX

The multiyear court effort to get NIH to release - and then remove redactions to - its royalty reports has driven the conversation for years, with the Senate Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs (HSGAC), and particularly Sen. Paul, working in concert with us on research and accountability. We are asking: Why are billions in cash flowing back to NIH and its scientists rather than to Treasury and taxpayers who made the work possible?

The latest finding, which saw the royalties total skyrocket during the Covid era to $710M, was broken in the New York Post's Sunday digital edition and Monday print edition (timed to coincide with Dr. Fauci's June testimony before the House Select Subcommittee on Coronavirus). Several members, including Rep. Nicole Malliotakis and Rep. Brad Wenstrup, referred to the reporting and pressed Dr. Fauci on solutions he would support.

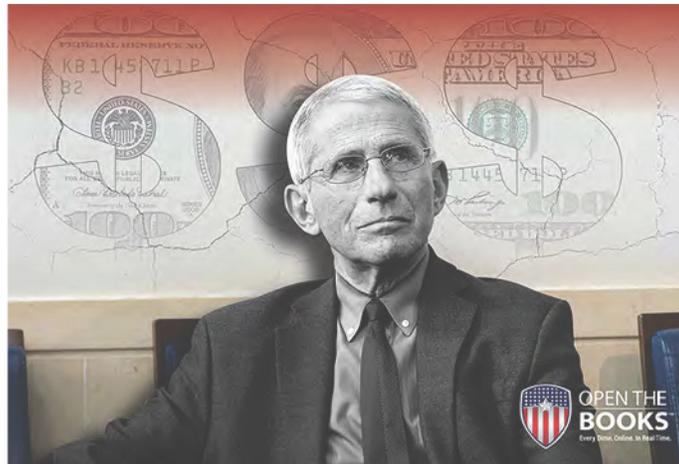

The reporting was so heavily covered that it spilled over into general interest and entertainment outlets like RADAR Online, while popular "meme" accounts posted the $710M figure (e.g. Dr. Gray Fang = 2.1M Instagram followers).

CAPITOL HILL IMPACT

The initial tussle between Fauci and Sen. Marshall over the former's compensation was spurred by a Forbes column.

We received citations in several letters and hearings on the NIH royalties and Covid response, including from the House Appropriations Committee, the Senate HELP Committee, and the Senate HSGAC. Sen. Paul introduced the Royalty Transparency Act and ran an op-ed in Reason that cited us. The New York Post supported the bill, and we published an op-ed in the Louisville Courier-Journal. HSGAC voted unanimously 12-0 to advance the legislation. Meanwhile Sen. Paul's Risky Research Review Act would reform the grant approval process to avoid another EcoHealth breakdown.

MEDIA IMPACT

Open the Books had its broadest media impact to date, ranging from traditionally liberal, mainstream media outlets to public television, to trade publications, to center-right outlets. Earned media included not just news articles but documentaries, opinion pieces (including joint op-eds with elected officials), long-form magazine stories, primetime cable news appearances, national radio, satellite radio, podcasts, and popular social media influencers. At the local broadcast level, our partnership with Sinclair affiliates continued to create a huge footprint, while we expanded beyond it with Spectrum News and local NBC.

Last year Open the Books was responsible for at least 300 local news hits through Sinclair: 250 interviews in one of five key local markets and 50 on The National Desk, their syndicated news program. Across their local affiliate footprint, those national investigations filled more than 3,250 programming blocks in 2024. Local news continues to enjoy more audience trust for neutrality than national and cable news.

The 2024 earned media imprint is the broadest and deepest in the organization’s history.

INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY SERVICES AT OPEN THE BOOKS

WE'RE THE NATION'S LARGEST PRIVATE DATABASE OF PUBLIC SPENDING

Open the Books has invested over $7 million in our proprietary software over the last 7 years. This investment ensures we are alone in the field of assessing tens of trillions of dollars of public spending.

In 2024 our team filed 60,000 Freedom of Information Act requests (FOIAs) - the most in American history. We also captured $9 trillion in government spending including 26.6 million salary records (federal, state and local).

OVERCOMING BUREAUCRACY

Frequently, government will produce redacted files, inconsistent data fields, or static images of records that make it challenging for the public to analyze and interpret the data they're seeing. We overcome those challenges with tenacity and creativity.

Our program follows written auditing rules that add built-in quality assurance capabilities.

The Open the Books platform provides clean data to make calculations and hold government officials accountable.

OUR SERVERS & LIMITLESS CAPACITY

We utilize multiple servers to process the data as it enters the system. This allows limitless growth in capacity as servers and bandwidth are added.

This content management system allows users to access spending at 110,000 individual government agencies.

400,000 LINES OF CODE

Our team has built a best-in-class, proprietary content management system with 400,000 lines of custom code to capture the idiosyncrasies of tens of thousands of units of government across the U.S.

Our internal program is designed to automate each unique public records request and adhere to exacting standards.

2024 MARKETING REPORT

As the influence of traditional, legacy media outlets has continued to wane, Open the Books has worked to embrace new media to amplify our work and reach diverse audiences.

SUBSTACK

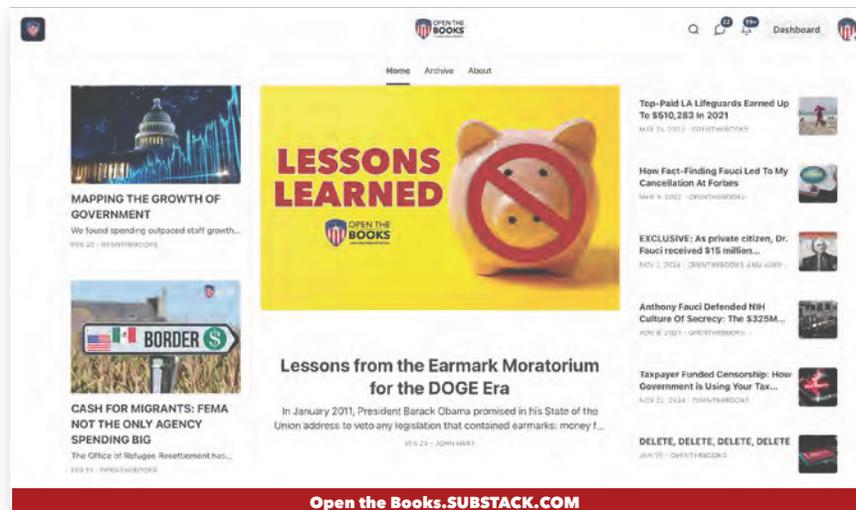

Substack has become a significant hub of free speech and investigative journalism, where independent minds can build a following. Matt Taibbi and Michael Shellenberger are examples of the power the platform can have, turning individual investigators and organizations into their own destinations for breaking news and analysis.

In 2023, Open the Books began a Substack to meet open-minded, inquisitive taxpayers where they were flocking. While traditional messages to our email audience tended to recount our recent investigations and the media mentions they earned, followers of our Substack would receive our investigations in the inbox the moment they were published. This brought us closer to our stated goal of every dime, online, in real time.

What started as a small following that migrated from our house email file exploded in growth during 2024, fueled by key investigations that received heavy citation in the media. Those included an article that brought hard data to the anecdotal stories of high staff turnover throughout Vice President Kamala Harris’ career, and another bombshell revealing taxpayers had continued funding Dr. Fauci’s multimillion-dollar security detail after his retirement.

The latter story was written and published jointly with another investigative journalist, Jordan Schachtel, who runs a Substack called The Dossier. The arrangement was mutually beneficial, as Open the Books received exposure to a new audience of health care-focused readers and traditional journalists, and Schachtel grew his footprint with Open the Books’ larger general audience. Open the Books will continue to pursue joint amplification when circumstances allow, in order to continue diversifying its audience.

At the end of the 2024, Open the Books enjoyed its most successful 30-day window on Substack to date, breaking 500,000 views for the first time (561,000). This progress continues to put Open the Books on the path to becoming a news destination of its own, outside of other earned media efforts.

X.COM

Open the Books placed a renewed emphasis on real-time interactions and content sharing on X (formerly Twitter).

During hearings on antisemitism and DEI in higher education, we interacted with reporters and thought leaders as events unfolded. Through exposure to those users' audiences, we gained additional followers.

We also worked to ensure clips from national news appearances began appearing on our feed within minutes of their airing. The clips include subtitles for the majority of people who scroll through clips that are muted by default. This new immediacy signaled to audiences that we were part of the real-time conversation around government transparency and wasteful spending.

Finally, we worked to attract the attention of the Department of Government Efficiency, Elon Musk, and then-co-chair Vivek Ramaswamy.

Elon Musk has used his own platform to highlight Open the Books reporting. His America PAC posted a New York Post story on where DOGE could begin cutting ridiculous federal spending, which heavily cited Open the Books findings. That post received 13.4 million views. Then Musk himself reposted it, to the tune of another 13.3 million views.

Our report on Dr. Fauci's security detail, covered by National Review, was amplified by Senator Rand Paul on X with 754,000 views. Musk again replied with, "This is insane," adding another 106,000 views to the story.

Musk's America PAC posted our chart of federal spending to combat "misinformation," most of which happened under the Biden administration. The post was viewed nearly 323,000 times. It stated, "Your tax dollars are being spent on research being done with the goal of censoring you."

Prior to his departure from the project, Ramaswamy also amplified our misinformation findings. His post on X links to the New York Post's cover story detailing our work. He included the comment, "DOGE will not tolerate this nonsense." The post received 2.9 million views.

A November 2024 Substack on DEI spending at the Department of Health and Human Services also attracted Ramaswamy's attention. He wrote a detailed summary of the article, linked to it, and amplified it on X with the comment "Time to DOGE It!" The post was viewed 2.3 million times, helping to turn the Substack article into one of our most-viewed and shared ever.

Beyond the DOGE principals, mentions from Sens. Ernst and Paul, Rep. Stefanik, committees including the House Budget Committee, and media personalities like Mollie Hemingway, all added to our presence on X.

This record-setting traction in 2024 also had additional downstream benefit for our Substack growth.

Open the Books will continue working to create a virtuous circle of growth among its various platforms in 2025.
