To: Adam Andrzejewski <Adam@openthebooks.com>;

The only payments my law firm has ever received from the State of Oregon (other than tax refunds) are payments in settlement of tort claims my law firm has filed against the Oregon Department of Human Services (“DHS”) on behalf of children abused, neglected, or killed due to the negligence of DHS. Portions of those settlement payments go to my law firm as attorney fees.

My law firm has contributed nothing ($0) to Governor Brown’s campaigns. My spouse and I have personally made contributions that probably add up to the figure below.

Please correct the statement so it is not materially misleading, particularly since as presently written, it suggests that my law firm, and not my spouse and I, have made political contributions to Governor Brown’s campaigns.

Hi Erin,

The purpose of this email is to confirm the accuracy of the Oregon state contract and payment disclosures and ask for any context you would like to provide regarding the statement copied below. All donations and state payments are since 2012. Here is the statement that will publish at Forbes that mentions your firm:

Law Office of Erin Olson and associated entities received $1.62 million in state payments. The firm’s named partner, Erin Olson, gave $32,250 to the governor’s campaign fund – more than any law firm.

My deadline is today at noon PST. Our piece will publish shortly thereafter at Forbes where I am a senior contributor. If you miss the deadline, we’ll try and update the piece with your comment on a timely basis.

Thank you for your prompt assistance.

Adam
