Adam—I refer you to the Oregon State Patrol’s communication’s officer, Tim Fox, who is included here. Requirements for the Dignitary Protection Unit’s activities are set by the OSP Superintendent, not by the Governor’s Office. The Superintendent has direct oversight of the Dignitary Protection Unit, and directs these officers based on OSP’s assessment of Governor Brown’s safety, including the daily threats made against the Governor.

Regards,

Bryan Hockaday
Press Secretary
Office of Governor Kate Brown

Subject: On-the-record statement requested - Gov. Kate Brown

Hi Chris,

We are publishing a piece to Forbes online and would like to include any context, background, or feedback that Governor Kate Brown would like to add. Our deadline is 3:00pm ET and if you miss the deadline, we'll try to update the piece on a timely basis.

The transparency piece to publish is in regard to some of the small-dollar expenditures from the office of governor credit card statements.

Please see our question below:

Would Governor Kate Brown like to comment on the spending allowances of the 'Dignitary Protection Unit' (state police officers) who have the responsibility to keep the governor safe, specifically those expenditures associated with Governor Brown's personal vacations, entertainment, and the car washes for the state vehicle?
