Dear Steven Hopkins,

Also copied is board chair Rita Walsh.

My name is Adam Andrzejewski. I am a regular contributor to Forbes.com and the CEO/Founder of OpenTheBooks.com. Later today, I anticipate publishing an online column at Forbes regarding the disclosed 2017 credit card expenditures of Natrona County School District. Our organization requested this information via open records, and it was provided to us by the district in January.

Here is a paragraph from the forthcoming column:

During calendar year 2017, $9.6 million in credit card expenditures was run up by the second largest school district in Wyoming, the Natrona County School District in Casper. Officials there charged off nearly 28,000 individual transactions, which averaged out to $27,400 a day on 76 charges - every day of the year.

This is a request for comment, feedback, and any context that you feel would be of interest to our readers at Forbes. For example, how many credit cards (p-cards) are issued by the district? Our deadline is 2 pm EST. We anticipate posting the piece online this afternoon.

Furthermore, any comment regarding the district's spending on travel, dining-out, recreation, and entertainment would also be material and help give context to our readers. Please provide any policies governing the usage of public credit. For example, are points or rewards accumulated?

We'd appreciate any feedback you'd be willing to provide.

Adam
